A Review on Work Satisfaction of Lawyers who work for Law Support Institutions (Lembaga Bantuan Hukum) and Who do not. (Widya Risnawaty, M. Psi.); S1 Psychology Studies Program, University of Tarumanagara, page 1-90; P1-P3; L1-L9).

Law is a substantial aspect of social life which is able to protect the duty and rights of human that emerges sense of justice and peace. One of the law officers is a lawyer. A lawyer is one who can give legal service to people in need of it commercially as well as free of charge. Lawyers who work for Law Support Institutions (Lembaga Bantuan Hukum / LBH) are those who give free of charged legal service, while those who work for commercial law firms charge their services. Psychological aspect measured in this observation is the work satisfaction of lawyers who work for LBH and who do not. The subjects of the observation are four, divided into two parts: two from those who work for LBH and two others work for non-LBH firms. The interviews to the four subjects started in September 10th, 2010 and ended in March 15th, 2011. The result of the observation shows that both pairs of lawyers have their satisfaction and justice or balance between what they give (input) and what they get from their work (outcome). They enjoy working either for LBH or present non-LBH firms (comparison person).

Key words : lawyer, input, outcomes, and comparison person.
