

ABSTRACT

Ernest Chirstian Murizio (705070117)

Differentiation Intention of Aggression Reviewed from Moral Development Theory (Dr. Fransisca Iriani, M.Si and Meiske Yunithree Suparman, M.Psi). Bachelor Degree, University of Tarumanagara. (64 pages, P1-P3, L1-L63).

Adolescent with tendency of aggression may cause conflict among individual or community, this may occur because there is intention to do an attack. Intention is a will to achieve something. Adolescent who have desire to defend their group, drive to do some aggression action to attack other groups, this will turn out because similarity in group. This also called conformity in conventional moral development stage. Conventional moral development stage also explained that behavior of individual in group will determine acceptance in their group. Morality development stages divided into three and each one have two stages. First stage is pre-conventional stage, which have an orientation in law and obedience, relative instrumental orientation. Second, orientation conventional in "good kid" is an orientation to regulation and social order. Third, post-conventional with orientation in social contract and universal ethic principal. Type of research is qualitative non-experimental with convenience sampling technique. Amount of questioner in measuring instrument was 62 (sixty two) variables intention aggression, and 58 (fifty eight) variables moral development, measuring instrument was made for adaptation from theory. Total of subject is 215 adolescent who lived at West Jakarta and processed became 98 subjects. Significant value from one-way anova was 0.700. The result was there are no differentiation intentions of aggression from moral development theory.

Key words: Intention, Aggression, Moral Development, Adolescent.