Marriage Satisfaction of a Young Adulthood Men who Get Married to a Hearing-Impairment Woman; Untung Subroto, M. Psi.; Undergraduate Program Psychology, Tarumanagara University, (i-ix; 86 pages; P1-P4; L1-L15).

Marriage satisfaction is a result of subjective evaluation towards marriage quality in general within some periods which changeable along the time passes by and affected by individual experiences as well (Bahr, Chappell, and Leigh, in Lailatushifah, 2003). Dwidjosumarto (in Somantri, 2006) stated that someone who cannot hear or lack of hearing is a hearing-impairment. The aim of this research is to get a picture of marriage satisfaction of a young adulthood man who got married to a hearing-impairment woman. There were three subjects between 29-35 years old and live in Jakarta for this research. This research used a qualitative descriptive method combined with interview and observation for its data compiling. The result shows that although not every component of marriage satisfaction is fulfilled on those three subjects, but in generally they are satisfied with their marriage. The condition of subject's wife also not causing any conflict in their marriage life.

Keywords: marriage satisfaction, hearing-impairment, young adulthood men.
