

ABSTRACT

Jovita Edlyn (705150037)

Social Skill in Homeschooling Student; Monika, M.Psi., Psi.; Undergraduate Program in Psychology, Tarumanagara University, (i-xiii; 119 Pages; R1-R3; Appdx 1-114)

Social skills are a set of learning abilities that allow an individual to interact competently and precisely in a particular social context (VanderBos, 2007). Social skills need to be owned by homeschooling students to be able to socialize outside the scope of homeschooling. Homeschooling is the formal instruction of students in their homes or other personal settings, often by both parents, teachers or a tutor. This study aims to provide an overview of social skills in students who have attended a homeschool education program. In-depth interviews were conducted on five men and four women (14 to 18 years old) who were homeschooled. This study lasted for five months, starting from February 2019 to June 2019. The results of this study indicate that the nine subjects have social skills in different ways. In general, the nine subjects have social skills in themselves.

Keywords: Social Skill, Homeschooling