The issue of state sovereignty has been debated over thousands of years. International law recognizes the exclusive right of the airspace over the state's territorial area. It followed by the obligation to provide air navigation services on their airspace. The responsibility may be delegated by mutual agreement. The agreement may be terminated at any time. This research examines the case of the delegation Flight Information Region (FIR) management of Batam and Natuna Island to Singapore since 1946 until 2020. Normative legal reseach methods are used on this research to analyze the legal issues through international treaties, legal regulations and other literatures related to FIR management. In conclusion, the delegation of the responsibility to provide air navigation service derogate the state's sovereignty.
